FREE BIRDING FESTIVAL EVENTS AT PLAYA

Scavenger Hunt, Carve A Bird Stamp, Guided Bird Walks, Door Prizes and More

It's time to celebrate spring in Lake County – finally! Head out to PLAYA in Summer Lake on Saturday, May 20 from 2:00 pm – 4:00 pm for fun family activities during the FREE BIRDING FESTIVAL.

Enjoy easy strolls on PLAYA's many trails guided by a bird docent and spot a variety of resident, migratory and rare birds. Each participant will receive a Bird Booklet upon arrival that includes a scavenger hunt list to be filled in and tallied at the conclusion for prizes. Visit several art and science stations to enjoy dissecting an owl pellet, carving a personal bird stamp, creating your own Bird haiku poetry, making a simple bird feeder, and more.

Refreshments will be served prepared by PLAYA's superstar chef, Shawna Negus, and door prizes and gifts will be presented during the closing ceremonies. PLAYA's Birding Festival is FREE for the entire family. See you Saturday, May 20 from 2:00 PM – 4:00 PM. Please call 541-943-3983 if you have any questions. Happy Spring!

I hate being repetitive but, sometimes I really feel the need to restate my opinion - especially when it comes to exercising our right to vote. The May 16th election is all about choosing who among us will be managing the many special taxing districts throughout Lake County - especially in its norther end.

Although elected, district board members are not compensated for their work. Often these positions require far more time working on district issues than time spent in regular board meetings. Managing budgets, be they large or small means many hours of self-education as to the pros, cons and public benefits of each decision.

For example, the Christmas Valley Park and Recreation District must manage a very tight budget while maintaining the following properties: The Airport, Baret Lake, The Golf Course, The Community Hall, The Rodeo Grounds, The District office and The Desert Whispers. They are also responsible for hiring and managing their employees and maintaining equipment used in property upkeep.

I guarantee you that you don't get all this done attending one meeting a month - no as a board member you have to study the issues so you can hopefully help the district achieve its purpose and mission.

When you get your ballot, notice that there are only a few contested positions. Why? Because most folks just want the services, and don't want to be a behind the scene unpaid worker. And many feel that they aren't qualified. If you are a registered voter in a district and you can read, then you can become involved in managing the services so vital to our small communities. It's not rocket science. What it is, is time commitment and a willingness to learn.

I encourage everyone to take advantage of your voting rights and participate. Having the right to vote should be seen as precious. Remember you forfeit your right to complain when you chose not to vote.

What's New and What's Up April 2023 went by in a whirlwind of blustery, cold weather. No tulips, daffodils, or fruit blossoms were seen near my house. The only trace of spring I noticed happened on social media where friends posted photos of spring flowers in more temperate climate zones. Water is everywhere, however, so we are doing our best not to complain.

"Busyness" has been the byword at Lake County Museum this past winter as the old "kitchen" room underwent extensive reconstruction. Wow! Does it ever look nice!

Old cabinetry and an unusable sink were removed, a window was uncovered, and cumbersome glass was removed from other cabinets. That previously worn-out room has been cleaned up with a sparkling paint job and new flooring has been installed. I can't wait to unveil its new and pristine condition when What's New and What's Up the museum opens its doors for the for peddlers, land locators, passing upcoming 2023 visitor season.

cowboys, sheepherders, and travelers in general. Often it was women who > ran the whole shebang while husbands tried to keep their homesteads afloat financially by working in Bend, or another location where paying jobs were available.

While sawing, hammering and paint fumes erupted from a reconstruction project in one room at Lake County Museum a Modoc War exhibit was created in the Native American Room.

Although the Modoc War took place in the Klamath Basin country west of Lake County it was one of the most significant events of western American history. Its proximity to southern Lake County caused anxiety for settlers from Paisley through Goose Lake Valley and southward into Surprise Valley, California. Stockades were hastily built for protection—just in case. Troops from both Camp Warner and Fort Bidwell were summoned to the Lava Beds where less than sixty Modoc Indians under the leadership of Captain Jack held off hundreds of soldiers from one-half dozen military installations.

Hostilities between Modoc Indians, settlers, and the Klamath Indian Tribe, often with military intervention, preceded the Modoc War for years. However, battles significant to the Modoc War occurred from late autumn of 1872 and culminated in the summer of 1873, 150 years ago. An official end to the Modoc War was marked in October of 1873 when Captain Jack and three of his followers were hung at Ft. Klamath > for the murder of General Canby, Rev. Thomas, and other crimes of war. In short, the Modoc War is one of the most compelling and tragic stories of western history. It has been researched, written, and rehashed from extensive points of See, What's Up pg 3.

On the Saturday evening before Easter I answered a knock on our door. There stood Katie and Everett Murphy. With a big smile, they handed me a basket. The attached note said "Dear Veteran, we wanted to give you a small token to thank you for your service. Happy Easter from the High Desert Cattle 4-H Club". Inside the basket we found the makings of an Easter Dinner: smoked, sliced tri-tip beef, potatoes, carrots and a package of rolls. My husband Al was touched by their thoughtful gift.

4-H Club members Kinsley Gebauer, Katie and Everett Murphy, Elena Villagrana, Kya and Cayden Kintzley sold Sees Candy to raise funds for their project to recognize local veterans. This year they delivered 41 baskets to veterans in Christmas Valley, Fort Rock, Paisley and Lakeview. In past years, the club has used some of their fund to fill a veteran's fuel tank or help with monthly bills.

Lake County and Schminck Memorial Museums are located side by side one-half block south of Lake County Courthouse on South E Street in Lakeview, Oregon. Both museums are under the direction of Lake County and presently curated by yours truly, Marie Lee. It has been a great retirement gig for me. Lake County Museum tells many of our local history stories while Schminck Memorial Museum is a showcase of a late 1800s and early 1900s lifestyle. Both museums are well worth a visit. If you have never been, or have not been recently, plan to stop by this summer.

Lake County Museum will open for the season on Thursday, May 4, 2023. Days and hours for the museum are typically Thursday, Friday and Saturday from 12 noon until 4:00 p.m. If those days and hours are not convenient for your planned trip, a special tour can be arranged by calling me: 541-417-0459, or emailing fandmrvnuts@yahoo.com. Leave a message on my phone as I carefully watch messages and return calls.

Back to the end of March. I had one more trip

One evening she was racing around with my Arab, Ben and Jill's Mustang in the arena. At one point they all rushed toward the big gate the separates the arena from the pasture. Apparently Amelia, that's her name, felt crowded and after slamming on the breaks, jumped the four foot gate from a standstill. She mostly cleared it but did manage to bump it hard enough to push the latching mechanism to the wrong side. So there she stood. Yes she just stood there while Jill rounded up some help to get the gate back in the correct position.

Amelia is just three years old and probably has a bit of growing to do. Currently she is 13/3 hands which is a large pony in the horse show world. Maybe I will be able to get on her from the ground - that's never going to happen with Ben who is just shy of 16 hands. For now Amelia is just going to get a lot of attention and ground work while she continues to mature. One thing is for sure, she is very curious and very brave, oh and she just loves people.

I sent the pages for this publication off to preprint on the 26th as I am heading over to the valley for another horse show on the 27th. This time I am going to the barn first - I was able to arrange a ride to the half way point with our local special transportation service. A gal from the barn, which is near Sandy, is meeting me and I will ride back to the barn with her. This is perfect because not only is Ben at the barn, so are my truck and trailer.

The plan is to haul to Eugene for the show, and then come home. Ben will be back and I will finally be able to get some riding in, and the truck and trailer will be home, and best of all my car will be home too. I'm so

There was a good deal of snow but the road was well sanded and there wasn't much traffic. Steve drove down from Estacada and we met at the parking structure for the Holt Center for the Performing Arts.

Six months earlier I had seen an article about a scheduled performance by SHEN YUN, showed it to Steve and asked him if he wanted to go to the Eugene performance for his birthday. He said yes, which is not surprising as over the years we have frequently treated ourselves to what we call adventures.

A little about Shen Yun. The performing companies are part of a Chinese Religion that is ban in China. The religious leader as well as the followers live, study and work at their compound near New York City. There are three touring groups of performers which in total perform in an average of 200 cities each year. An article in the New Yorker explained the performances this way, "Today's Shen Yun performances are grand, with a large cast of 180 brilliant dancers, spectacular sets and bright colors. Dance can be beautiful while also performing political arguments. They are not mutually exclusive." Shen Yun provides audiences with a new original show each season.

This description is an understatement. The dancers are absolutely flawless as they present classic ballet type choreography while costumed in flowing, ever swirling garments. Then they present a folk tale or myth in dance. The program moves back and forth between these two main themes. Dotted throughout the program are two solos by tenors and an amazing piece > played on an Erhu -- a two stringed bowed Chinese instrument dating back 1000 years.

> So trying to describe the performance is close to impossible. Their was a huge screen at the back of the stage with a short wall just in front of it. Beautiful scenery was displayed during the first dance number. The next presentation was a mythical story and that was when the surprise and the fun began. A dancer eaped on to the wall only to instantly jump down behind it and again instantly appear on screen. These transitions from the real to the video were absolutely precise and often unexpected. So much so that the 2400 audience members were wowed and often jointly reacted to the surprise.

Shen Yun Auo Pin is Shen Yun's video platform. You can visit their website to see what they offer. It's worth a look see. Visit shenyunzuopincom.

Of courser everyone has notice all the excavating along the highway over the past few weeks. I think most of you know that benefiting from a significant grant the Christmas Valley Domestic Water Supply District is replacing miles of antiquated, worn out mainlines. It is a massive task but currently it is moving along nicely.

I know that the process requires use of the existing utility easements and sadly that has caused the loss of several very nice tree. Here in the desert, trees are special. They take a great deal of nurturing when they are young and once they are well established provide visual respite as well as shade. Oh well such is the price of progress. Indeed my neighbors are loosing their back fence line and have already cut down the row of Aspen along it that provided a substantial wind break. Indeed for as far as I can see east down the easement that intersects my property I can see that fencing and structures and a few more trees are going to have to be replaced as sometime in the past twenty something years all these property lines were incorrect. Ten feet into the utility easement means all this has to be rectified. I'm lucky as most of the disruption on my piece of property will be to my lawn and just one section of my side fence.

The Free Birding event at PLAYA on May 20th is a great opportunity for families and individuals to learn about the birds that visit or reside in our high desert. It is an activity-filled adventure and I wish I were able to be a part of it, but I will be in Milton-Freewater that weekend.

I sure hope that a lot of locals take advantage of this.

Bee-Cuzz You Asked March and the Bees

By Gary A. Brain Summer Lake Apiaries

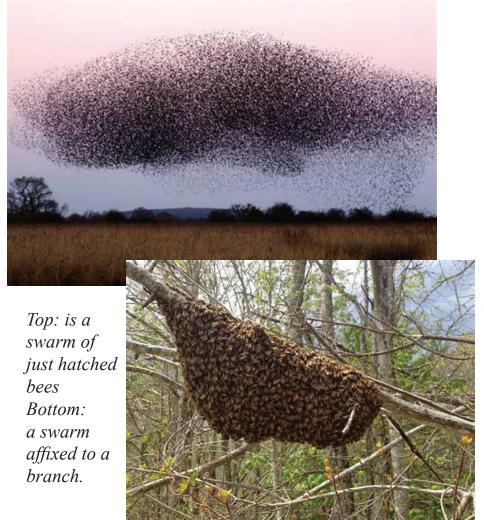

I ended up splitting three of my strongest hives and hope to increase my apiary by three for a total of nine. I have also fortified my fencing for Boo Boo and Yogi in case they want to try for a free meal this Spring.

So what do we do in April? FEED! one to one sugar water until the girls quit using your feeders which may bee well into May as not much blooms in the high desert until mid-May to June. April typically is the start of swarm season, so we need to make sure we look for signs of potential swarm activity. This requires an increase in hive inspections. So what are the signs a hive is going to swarm?

In order of increasing significance, signs your colony is about to swarm are:

- An abundance of food stored in the hive, with little space for more
- A lack of comb space for brood rearing
- A high worker and drone population and/or 'idle' worker bees
- The construction of queen cell cups (the foundation of queen cells), which will be on the lower and side edges of brood combs
- Queen cell caps containing eggs or larvae from this point your hive is definitely preparing to swarm
- Capped queen cells on the lower and side edges of combs (aka swarm cells) your hive could swarm any time now!
- The removal of wax from the tip of queen cells exposing the cocoon – take urgent action to manage the swarm

Workers sometimes build

queen cell cups

then later remove them. But if these cups contain eggs or larvae than this is a sure sign that swarming could occur very soon.

It takes nine days after capping for the new queen to emerge. The old queen always leaves with the swarm before the new queen emerges. So, swarming occurs between 1-9 days after capping of the first queen cell.

Recognizing Swarm Cells.

Workers build swarm cells along the bottom or side edge of the frame. Do not confuse these with the emergency queen cells constructed by workers after the loss of a queen.

When a hive is Queenless workers modify worker cells on the surface of the brood comb to raise queens. If you have already searched for the queen to no avail, these cells generally confirm she is not there. Only remove these queen cells if you are re-Queening the hive yourself. Of course this requires at least weekly inspections of your hives. So how can you prevent a colony from swarming?

You want to provide additional room as required, to make sure the colony does not get congested. You can add an extra box to create more space. You may also want to increase ventilation by opening your screened bottom board if you sue them (just a bit, if night time temperatures remain cool) or propping up the inner cover slightly. Relieving the feeling of congestion by creating more space and improving ventilation will go a long way towards preventing the colony from swarming.

Another manipulation that will assist the beekeeper in controlling the swarm impulse is reversing. Over the course of the winter, the colony and its queen tend to move upward through the hive. In the spring the beekeeper is likely to find his/her bees living in the upper hive body. The queen will be inclined to stay there and not move down, confining the brood space to the upper part of the hive.

The reversing process is simple. Take an extra bottom board with you to the bee yard and place it next to the hive. If the hive is made up of three hive bodies, take the uppermost hive body and place it on the spare bottom board. Then remove the second hive body and place it on top of the first hive body you just placed on the spare bottom board. Now remove what was the bottom hive body of the original hive and place it on the top of the reversed hive bodies.

You have just reversed the hive and created a lot more space while doing so. This is what I did, both to prevent swarming as well as adding additional colonies.

Another activity in April to keep in mind is to treat for mites. As mites are here to stay I have adopted a Colorado method of treating mites as we have similar climates.

Varroa management plan for Colorado and similar climates:

- 1 We have stopped testing for mites. We know they are always there.
- 2 Monthly single oxalic acid vaporizer (OAV) "knockdown" treatment. For overwintered bees, start in May. For new hives, start in June or July. Repeat monthly with final OAV treatment in the beginning to middle of August.
- 3 If honey supers are present, remove supers during treatment and replace immediately after treatment.
- 4 Remove honey supers at the end of August or very beginning of September. (I sometimes wait until October)
- 5 Apply a long-term organic mite treatment after removing honey supers. Examples would be Apiguard (thymol), Mite Away Quick Strips (formic acid), or Hop Guard II (hops beta acids). You need to do your research on these loge term methods to see which of these treatments works for you.

So that's about it for April.
Stay safe and enjoy the mosquito hatch!

Marinated Pork Tenderloin & Side Dishes

Submitted by Marie Brain

Had a wonderful visit with my sister, Elyse and cousin, Evie from the West Side of the state in April. Our favorite pastime is laughing and eating! I showed the girls how to make some of the cheeses we Summer Lake-ites have been having fun learning to make in our kitchens.

While the Parmesan cheese was brining for a few hours, we took the tour of Christmas Valley, visiting Willows and stopping in at the Ranch Hand for lunch. We wandered home about 5 just in time to entertain Gary with our exploits and to rescue the Parmesan from its salty bath.

We all take turns cooking and Evie's contribution was a melt in your mouth Pork Tenderloin. I have to share because it was incredibly delicious and very easy! Her recipe serves 4 lightly with a couple of slices left so double it if you have bigger appetites.

Marinated Pork Tenderloin

1 lb Pork
Tenderloin
1 Cup Yoshidas
Original Terriyaki
(Or any good Terriyaki sauce)
2 Cloves of Garlic,

crushed (or more to taste. Never too much Garlic)

Marinate Pork in Yoshida's mixture for 2 hours or more. Overnight is fine too.

Meanwhile preheat oven to 350° F and spritz an 8 inch or so baking dish with cooking spray.

Place marinated Pork and the Marinade into the baking dish, adding 1/2 - 3/4 Cup water to dish and roast about 45 minutes or until interior temperature of the Pork is 150° when tested with an instant read thermometer.

Thinly slice the tenderloin and arrange on platter, pouring the marinade over the meat.

(The Marinade will thicken and caramelize in the oven so add a bit more water if it reduces too much. You WILL want sauce to drizzle over the meat on your plate.)

Check the temp after 30 minutes in order to gauge the remaining time to 150°
F. Overcooking will result in tough meat!

Sides to enjoy with your Marinated Pork Tenderloin:

Roasted Asparagus (5-6 spears per person)

While the oven is on, wash and trim some fresh asparagus, put in a small baking dish, drizzle with EVOO and roast till crisp tender. 10 -15 minutes.

Roasted Smashed Baby Taters (4-5 baby taters per person)

Wash some Baby Potatoes and boil in salted water to cover til just tender. Spread on a greased, rimmed baking sheet and gently partially flatten each Tater with a flat bottomed drinking glass. Drizzle with melted Garlic Butter, sprinkle with Parmesan cheese and roast for a few minutes til browned and the cheese is melted.

Add a crisp green salad and you're done!

Enjoy! Marie

Chapter FIFTEEN

Old Walleye came up the driveway two days later. Annie and Nancy were exhausted from the long hours confined in the vehicle and very glad to be home. There was a good supply of canned fruit and vegetables in the back of the pickup. The Morgan family would eat well this winter.

Nancy greeted her dad. Then, before he could stop her, ran to the lot where Dandy was kept. she was back in just a moment. "Dad, where's Dandy?" she demanded. Clint took a deep breath. "He must have missed you so much he got antsy and rubbed the gate down. He was gone when I came in from riding one day."

"How could he rub the gate down? Didn't you wire the gate like always?" Nancy was obviously upset. "I reckon the wire must be broken. That happens sometimes," Clint said. "He'll come home, won't he Dad? Horses always come home when they get loose," Nancy said hopefully.

"He'll go home. The only question is, where is home to him – here or the rimrock country where he grew up. I've been looking for him and I'll ride for him again tomorrow if he doesn't show up," Clint assured her.

They all worked at unloading the pickup and storing the jars of food in the cellar. Then Nancy made an inspection tour. It was good to see all the familiar animals again. Annie was bubbling over with news of their trip. "Old Wallleye ran fine except that it vapor-locked coming up Quartz Mountain. I had some water to pour on the fuel pump. I'd still be out there if I had to wait for it to cool down enough to run again."

"It's so hot and muggy there. We went swimming every day and that helped. Nan's getting so she swims as well as the local kids. It wasn't the same there now with Dad's mind for of off and on. It's real hard on Mom. She's getting old so fast it scares me."

Clint picked up the battered suitcases and carried them to the house. Then he took Annie in his arms and kissed her. It was good to be together again.

Clint rode hard the next few days looking for Dandy. He even spent a night on the desert so he could cover more ground. He checked all the water holes, looking for tracks. Studying the findings, he concluded that Dandy had not joined a band of horses. He seemed to be traveling alone. Twice during the search, Clint had the feeling he was being watched, but a search with binoculars revealed nothing.

Nancy had been avoiding Clint. Finally, he challenged her. "Don't you think I've been trying to find Dandy? I know you miss him but that's no reason to take it out on me." Nancy's eyes were smoldering.

Clint rode hard the next ys looking for Dandy. He pent a night on the desert could cover more ground. ecked all the water holes, ag for tracks. Studying dings, he concluded that what had not joined a band you know he is alive. It's almost a sure thing the buckaroos will bring him in when they gather horses this fall. In the meantime. There are plenty of other horses you can ride." "It isn't any fun to ride other horses," Nancy complained.

When the Morgans picked up their mail the following Sunday, there was a letter from Hod and Norma Coleman. Clint read it and handed it to Annie. "What do you think, honey?" he asked. "Sounds good to me," she answered with a smile. Annie asked Nancy, "How would you like to spend a few days with the Colemans during rodeo and fair?" she asked.

Nancy looked appealingly

"That wire wasn't broken. You just forgot to fasten it and then lied to me."

"You're right, Nan, the wire wasn't broken and I did lie to you. But I didn't forget to wire the gate. Dandy was stolen." When Clint finished telling the story he added, "I'm really sorry I lied to you, Nan, but I didn't want you to hate anyone the way I hate that man." "Well, I do hate him. I don't think even God would expect anyone to love a horse thief," Nancy declared.

Nancy was sure Dandy would come home on his own. She ran to the lot first thing every morning to see if he had returned in the night. Each day, she became a little more dejected. One day, Annie tried to talk to her. "I know how your feel, Nan, but moping around will not bring Dandy back. At least at Clint. "Dad, we can't leave. What if Dandy were to come home and find us gone? He might leave again and never come back."

"If he does come home, he'll most likely hang around even if we aren't here. Anyway, he's bound to get picked up when we start gathering cattle and horses this fall. I'm darn sure not going to miss rodeo just because of one horse that's wandering around in the desert somewhere." Clint's tone of voiced said plainly that the case was closed.

Nancy sighed resignedly. She supposed she would have to go. She wondered about the Coleman kids. She had seen them last year at the parade when the kids were scrambling after candy people were tossing from the floats. She remembered they were a few years younger. The whole idea really didn't sound very exciting.

Her thoughts were interrupted by Annie. "The first thing we'll have to do when we get to Burns is buy some new clothes. You've grown so fast this summer, you're about out of everything."

After laundry was finished the next day, Annie suggested that Nancy take a ride on War Bonnet. She had not been allowed to ride her mother's favorite before. He was a beautiful bay with stockings and a blazed face, high spirited but not flighty. It was an honor to be allowed to ride him and Nancy accepted the honor gratefully.

They stopped in the juniper trees on the ridge. Nancy dismounted and tightened the cinch. A small movement caught her attention. A three-point buck and materialized from nowhere. Then a stray breath of air came up from the valley and drifted to the buck. In an instant he wheeled and was gone. Nancy sighed, the magic of the moment shattered.

Next Month: Chapter 16

The Prospector and his writing travel a path that has many curves and bends along the way, but in the end an interesting destination is reached. So spend a little time mulling over the journey and if you are curious like me, you may find yourself getting ready to do a little exploring.

Sometime in the next four or five months, the world will see the first American moon missions in half a century as one of a lunar fleet makes a return journey to Earth's satellite. The arrivals won't be human-at least not yet-and they won't even be government-built. The coming lunar fleet will consist of private spacecraft carrying scientific experiments and other cargo for paying customers, including NASA.

Leading the competition is Nova-C on a SpaceX Falcon 9 rocket. A dozen more firms are expected to follow in the next six years, carrying cargo ranging from a magnetometer and supplies for a future lunar base camp to small amounts of cremated human remains. These will be just the latest firsts in a gradual ramping up of the commercial space economy.

SpaceX launched its first rocket in 2006, and since 2012 it and other private companies such as Northrop Grumman have been flying cargo to the International Space Station- and more recently, crew members.

In 2021 the long-delayed eras of regular private space tourism arrived as billionaires and celebrity customers started riding rockets into near earth space. But going to the Moon is a much taller order. Rockets that can reach the moon must burn far more fuel than normal launches to escape earth's orbit and enter a lunar trajectory. The journey takes three days instead of a few minutes to reach Earth's orbit. Although companies such as

The Moon Base planned by NASA

SpaceX have plans for crewed ships to the moon, such space vehicles are still in the prototype phase. It is important to note that the new moon race is being pioneered by small companies.

Geopolitics also helped this new space race. Former President Trump's ambitions to go to the moon were, fueled by great concern and even fear of China's rise in space technology development. As such, NASA was funded $2.6 billion to work with private enterprise in the endeavor and at a much lower cost.

In December 2020 a Chinese space vehicle and rover arrived at the moon's South Pole where it collected samples that were later returned to Earth. Don't think for a second that all this exploration and commercialization is about science - it's not. It is about Free Enterprise.

It is all about what makes America the most powerful country in the World --MONEY!!

In other words, the investors and entrepreneurs working in this iteration of the private space industry aren't specifically motivated by scientific curiosity, but their primary motivation is, of course, money!

They are out to make money, from lunar resources and proliferation of people and businesses interested in those resources. The value of those lunar materials is still hypothetical. Since 2016, $258 billion has poured into the space program through 1,688 such companies. Evidence that venture capitalist see many opportunities beyond the bounds of earth, which has been a problem for the past 50 years.

Lunar scientists are watching this activity with a mixture of skepticism and hope. "I'm still pretty early in my career, and this is the second or third time I've been told we're going back to the moon," says Angela Stickle, a planetary scientist at Johns Hopkins University's Applied Physics Laboratory. "But I think it is real this time. The launches are on the books, they been paid for, and that's something we've never had before".

Of course, the sustainability of any private enterprise depends on making money, and the prospects for a gold rush on the moon are still speculative. Is it really a lasting market for commercial lunar landers? That depends on you who ask-and on what the new fleet of robots are able to pull off. This wave of leading to more questions and ultimately to new interest from prospectors who want experiments that will lead to a profitable cycle in which the first instruments make promising finds, leading to more questions. In mining analogy, an economy builds around people going out looking for gold, and you are going to start selling those picks and shovels and overalls. In the moons case, the shovels are things like communications capability and solar power, which are commodities a lauder can sell for 'fee'.

From 50 years of not going to the moon to several deliveries scheduled over the next three and a half years is exciting. To quote Karen and Richard, "We've Only Just Begun."

Dark Sky Lighting Solutions

Use fully shielded, dark-sky friendly fixtures. That means lights shine down, not up, and don't created glare and contrasts

Only use lights when and where needed. Install timers and dimmer switches, and turn off lights when not in use. If you must have security lighting use motion sensors.

Use the right amount of light. Too much light is wasteful and impairs vision.

Use long-wavelength lights with a red or yellow tint to minimize negative health effects. Lights in this spectrum are often referred to as 'Warm'.

Everything you might want to know about the best lighting for your needs that are dark sky friendly can be found at darksky.org.

Good lighting design can mitigate glare and keep you and what you value safer.
